Admiral Dennis C. Blair, USN (Ret.)
President
Institute for Defense Analyses

Welcome

In recent months, defense planning has focused increasingly on two issues: terrorism and transformation. The attacks on September 11 changed the way many people think about national security, as defending the homeland against large-scale terrorism moved from hypothetical scenarios to real-world operations. In coordination with other government organizations, the Department of Defense is working to enhance U.S. security at home, while taking the fight to terrorists in Afghanistan and elsewhere.

The demands of the war on terrorism have not diminished DoD’s commitment to force transformation. Instead, the challenge in Afghanistan has highlighted the need for transformation in force concepts and capabilities, both to exploit technological opportunities and to deal effectively with enemies as they adapt to avoid U.S. strengths. Some of the concepts underlying transformation—such as decision superiority and effects-based operations—are being demonstrated in Afghanistan and are the subjects of rigorous analysis and experimentation at home.

Other important defense needs remain as priorities. The Department must still maintain forward deployments in critical areas, support contingency operations in the Balkans and elsewhere, sustain force readiness, and recruit and retain high-quality personnel. Many aging systems must be replaced and the supporting infrastructure modernized to increase efficiency and effectiveness.

The government continues to need analytic help in addressing these complex issues, and our sponsors continue to call on IDA for objective analyses and advice. In the days following September 11, IDA researchers helped define options for accelerating production of items likely to be needed in the war on terrorism and developed plans for deploying chemical and biological sensors in Washington. In subsequent months, we have been assessing and reconstructing operations in Afghanistan, improving understanding of future terrorist threats, and evaluating equipment, technologies, and processes for dealing with chemical and biological attacks.

IDA is dedicated to the sole mission of providing high-quality analyses of important national security issues. For over 45 years, that mission has led to exciting technical and analytic challenges for our staff.
Suspension & Release Equipment:
LAU-142/A AMRAAM Vertical Eject Launcher

Stealth plays a major role in many of today’s aircraft missions. The Lockheed Martin F-22 Raptor is the state-of-the-art in stealth technology. With the need to carry and eject AMRAAM missiles from within concealed weapons bays, EDO, as part of the F-22 Team, developed a new launcher capable of achieving all internal bay armament delivery requirements.

The result is the LAU-142/A AMRAAM Vertical Eject Launcher (VEL), which carries and ejects AIM-120C missiles from shallow internal missile bays for safe aircraft separation at mach speeds.

Compact design, optimized for weight-to-stiffness performance, was achieved for the VEL through state-of-the-art computer engineering, analysis and manufacturing processes.

The VEL employs a highly-reliable, non-pyrotechnic energy system controlled by aircraft electrical and hydraulic power. When commanded for in-flight missile launch, the VEL system charges, and then safely ejects the missile through the air-flow boundary layer in less than 1/10 of a second. Safe ground loading operations are conducted with the VEL in a ground-safe extended position.

VEL CHARACTERISTICS

Weight: 115 pounds
Stroke Length: 9 inches
End-of-Stroke Velocity: 27 fps nominal

Ground Extend and Retract Time: 3 seconds each

- Triaxial missile restraint throughout stroke
- Extends out of bay for easy ground loading
- Optimized weight-to-performance design minimizes deflection
